HE LIKED THE PLACE.

President Harrison Enjoyed His Visit to the Hawaiian Village.

A friend has kindly sent a copy of the Newburgh, N. Y. Journal to this paper, containing a letter from Mr. James A. Brewster, whom some of our readers may remember as a school teacher here in the sixties and seventies. It refers, among other things to ex-President Harrison's visit to witness the cyclorama of Kilauea, which all will be interested in:

The political situation boils up even in the "Crater of Kilauea." At one stage of the Cyclorama Exhibition a young Hawaiian, personating an ancient pagan priest, standing beside the lake of glowing lava, propitiating with droning chants the wrath of the goddess Pele—followed, shortly, with a charming rendition by the native mandolin quartette of one of Liliuokalani's fine musical compositions, to illustrate, as the lecturer said, the progress of the race, in music, during fifty years. "Why, then," spoke up a Chicago man in the audience, "Have you de-throned so valuable a promoter of musical cultivation?" "Because she had no talent in any other direction," was the ready response of the bright-witted lecturer, a nephew of Minister Thurston. I fall in with many distinguished visitors at the Hawaiian Concession; no less on "Stanford University Day," than ex-President Harrison. He did not disdain to show his profound and hearty interest in "Little Hawaii"—took in everything from the big, tawny plantation bullock and his Kanaka rider, at the entrance, to the hundred-year-old sacred turtle, near the exit gate. He examined, curiously, the famous taro plant, tasted, cautiously, the classic poi, gazed, intently, upon the fine relief-map of the three principal islands; marked the position of Kilauea's crater on the slope of the snow-clad Mauna Loa, and, with appreciative eye realized the magnificent proportions, perfect safety and the commercial and strategic value of coral gated Pearl Harbor, near Honolulu. He gave a hurried glance at Queen Lil's vacant throne-chair, and other relics of the effete monarchy; scarcely noticed the hula-hula dancers; stopped thoughtfully before the canon and sand-bags intended to defend the Provisional Government house from Cleveland's forcible restoration policy, and passed on to study the gigantic growths of sugar cane, vigorous coffee shrubs, and fine displays of rice-sheaves and cotton-balls from "those barren shores," as certain "cuckoo" Congressmen recently styled the fertile fields of "Hawaii-nee."

Finally, the ex-President was escorted to the pretty lanai, where himself, daughter and "Baby McKee" were offered cups of fragrant Kona coffee, which were sipped amidst everything tropical—all overhead, golden and russet chequered mangoes dangling on their slender stems, and branches of brown-podded tamarinds, and huge bunches of bananas and luscious dates galore; with waistcoat of piled-up coconuts in husk, yams, papayas and richly-scented pineapples.

On the whole, the late President concluded, doubtless, that he didn't make a mistake in exercising, as he did, his treaty-making powers to accept a year ago, the offer of the island realm. But Harrison didn't make any disagreeable comparisons between his course and that of his official successor, in regard to Hawaiian affairs, for that—nor did he introduce the Hawaiian question into his address at Festival Hall, but it greatly pleased me.

Shortly after General Harrison, who should turn up at Sunset City but Theophilus Davies, on his way to Washington to coach Mr. Cleveland in regard to the latest phase of Hawaiian affairs. How well I remember him, thirty-four years ago, as a shipping clerk in Honolulu—then a perfect type of Du Maurier's slender young Englishman—now a burly Briton, who has waxed fat on American reciprocity.

For thirteen years, from 1859, the "Pin-Head Kingdom" was my home. The twigs which I as a teacher then bent, have now grown into trees—a very few inclined to shadow and protect the throne; but nearly every one of them, as Minister Thurston, Counsellor Waterhouse, and a score of others, stand firm in the support of the heroic Provisional Government. The late revolution has, of course, been of absorbing interest to me, holding the relation that I do to some of its leading actors, and because more than a quarter of a century ago, right on the ground, I plainly saw the beginning of the irrepressible conflict which has resulted in the present crisis—clearly foresaw that the "Cross-Roads of the Pacific" were bound to become, sooner or later, the theater of notable events. How keenly I observed the early evolution of the Royalist and Republican factions, whose contentions have resulted in a Provisional Government, promptly and properly recognized by Minister Stevens. He, in 1890, knew no more than I, the Yankee schoolmaster abroad, a score of years before, exactly when the bubble of absolutism would burst, but, that burst it must, and, despite all Cleveland and Greshams, beyond the power of restoration.

How well I recall certain types of antipodal social elements—Cavalier and Puritan—which so long ago existed in the Sandwich Islands. On such a divine morning as can only be found in that perfect climate, caroling up Nuuanu Avenue, I met John O. Dominis, late consort of the ex-queen, Dr. Robert McKibben, court physician, and John Cummins, sporting attaché of his Majesty. They, after a late and dainty déjeuner, well-mounted on hand-some caparisoned steeds, were en route via the picturesque "Pali," to oversee (2) their plantations on the other side of Oahu. A luxurious lunch, which is delicately discussed by this precious trio, awaits their arrival. An early return, for a royal reception, precludes even a gallop through the cane-fields; and, "Ho! and away for Honolulu!" ends their "business day."

Per contra: During my school vacation of that same year, spent at the plantations of Samuel T. Alexander, William Bailey and Henry P. Baldwin, I found these gentlemen, each morning at the break of day afield, watching the irrigation ditches—and, all day long, strictly attending to the actual care and conduct of their several plantations.

Nothing could result but what has resulted; this latter class of men largely own the islands—will not tolerate absolutism, ask for annexation, have successfully resisted "restoration," thus far; and, meanwhile, under Dole's able Presidency stand and wait, and work out their political salvation, as best they can. They have conquered the respect and sympathies of the better portions of mankind.

The cause of "Little Hawaii"—in its significance—is a big thing; and Sunset City—and the rest of the world—knows it!

A FATAL OMEN.

It Symbolizes the Fall of the Monarchy.

There is widespread consternation in the royalist camp. A royal palm has fallen in the yard of the ex-Queen. It struck the fence and smashed it. The superstitious natives naturally regard this as a very bad omen, and to conceal the fact from their knowledge, the tree was cut up and removed as speedily as possible. In order to remove from the entire episode the appearance of accident the fence was not repaired, but cut away and a gate put in.

It is very doubtful whether the cause of the royalists will be able to survive this final blow, in which heaven itself seems to have spoken.

A NARROW ESCAPE.

A Custom House Guard Takes an Involuntary Bath.

V. J. Fageros, a Custom House guard, had rather a narrow escape from drowning yesterday. When the brig L'Avvenier was coming in Fageros was sent out to board her. He met the brig just outside the lighthouse, and, while trying to catch a side line, his boat boy made a false move and the boat capsized. Fageros caught the rope, but fell into the water, and was jerked along at a good speed. The pilot's boat, which was holding on to the same line, pulled up, and the nearly breathless man was hauled on board, but little the worse for his involuntary bath.

Ben Gallagher's Trial.

The Gallagher mayhem case was called in the Circuit Court yesterday. There was considerable trouble getting an unprejudiced jury, but after a couple of hours' work the following were accepted: Captain Cluney, Harry Armitage, J. M. Dowsett, W. H. Wilkinson, Carl Scott, J. Lucas, C. von Hamm, Mr. Scott, F. Hustace, George Harris, Mr. Van Dorn and J. T. Waterhouse.

The testimony was nearly the same as that adduced at the District Court trial. The prosecution did not finish its case, and the trial will come up again this morning, and will probably occupy all day.

A Splendid Journey.

The Riverside, (Cal.) Enterprise is holding a voting contest to decide which one of the citizens of that town shall be given a free trip to Honolulu and back. Great interest is being taken in the vote, there being already thirty candidates for the enviable journey. The voting is conducted on the same general plan as was the ADVERTISER baseball contest two years ago.

Mrs. Gans' Lecture.

Kawaiahao Church was full last evening at Mrs. Gans' illustrated lecture on "Paris," which was given for the benefit of the Historical Society. The pictures were beautiful, and the audience was a most appreciative one. During the evening a few of the many new Hawaiian slides were shown, and fairly brought down the house.

Death of an Old Resident.

News has reached Honolulu of the death of Dr. Edwin C. Bissell, who will be remembered by old residents as having been at one time pastor of the Fort Street Church. He died on the 9th of April in Chicago. He was the author of several religious works of a conservative character.

The pictures of the house on Laysan Island, where the unfortunate Hans Holstein died, and also of Holstein himself, are taken from photographs kindly loaned by J. J. Williams. Mr. Williams took them on a recent trip to the island.
